Preparing a Resume?

A resume is a self-marketing document that targets your qualifications and experience to the needs of prospective employers. Therefore, your style, skills and education should be tailored to the specific employer.

A resume is not necessarily a one-shot effort. You will constantly be required to refine and update the information you expect them to open for you. Your job is to make sure it is the employer's needs.

Components of a Resume
1. NAME AND ADDRESS, TELEPHONE - Who you are and where you can be contacted. Personal information is not required.

2. JOB OBJECTIVE - Optional but highly recommended.

3. SUMMARY OF SKILLS - Another optional section, but it is a perfect self-marketing tool. It is a short summary of what you have written on the resume captures the reader's attention. It is the best self-marketing tool.

4. EDUCATION AND TRAINING - Start with the most recently attained education first. List the program or degree, including area of specialization, name of institution and date of graduation.

5. RELEVANT SKILLS AND EXPERIENCE - There are many ways to note your accomplishments, depending on the format you choose.

Consider what relevant accomplishments you have gained from previous jobs and write them in a clear, concise manner that clearly and concisely describes how you used or developed those skills in the past. An accomplishment starts with a performance action verb, e.g. motivated, developed, or provided, completed, designed, etc. followed by a result.

6. WORK HISTORY - List paid and volunteer jobs, the dates you started and ended, locations are especially your job title and name and city of company/business. List in reverse chronological order.

7. REFERENCES - Do not include references on your resume. They should be typed on a separate sheet of paper and provided as the interview goes.

For more information, contact the Career Center at Coe College.

GENERAL WORKSHOPS have been scheduled covering the topics of:

Success of board game a surprise for student inventor

By Kathleen Puckering

If she had made a million again, Catherine Valente, a third-year Conestoga College nursing student, she still would be doing it all herself.

Valente, who needed money to pay for her tuition and expenses for her first business, came up with the idea to create a board game while working with the library.

"My goal was to create a game to promote and teach older children could learn an important lesson from," Valente said.

The game, called I Am a Member of the Club, has been in circulation for several years in 100 copies has emerged from the library, it was first in 1988 under 1988.

Conestoga College's 1988 for Valente to realize a dream and has been instrumental in the game now, which are so high price Valente said.

"I really did the national system for success. I don't know why I started this. Now she said it was just the chance to do it all over again she wouldn't be selling the board game to anyone else.
